MTV: We know you visited the set several times. Did your visits feel like work or pleasure?

Meyer: Well, that was one of the coolest things that agreeing to do a movie gave me, because I was right in the middle with [my career]. I had two book tours this year, all this crazy stuff, and the movie was just fun. I found it fascinating. One time, I had my brother with me for two days, and I knew he was just bored stupid [when I took him to set], like, "Ugh, how can they say the same line again for the 16th time?" I was with the humans that time, and for me, every time Anna Kendrick added a new little twist or her eyebrow raised just a little differently, those nuances were fascinating to me, probably because [the character] was mine. I don't know if I'd be that way if it were another film, but I was looking at the monitor and kept saying, "Oh, I love that!" I was just thrilled.
